Masha and the bear coloring online games

In the old days, playing games on your PC meant driving to the store and perusing the shelves in search of the latest and greatest titles. Now you can just fire up your browser. The internet is home to an amusement park worth of fun for all ages, including first-person shooters, flight simulators, massively multiplayer online role-playing games, and even old-school stuff like Checkers and Hearts. Best of all, many game destinations charge you no fees; at most, you need to sit through an ad or two. Before you start warming up your trigger finger, however, keep in mind some safety measures. Firstly, it is always a good idea to use a different password for each gaming site you visit. On of the chance hackers break into a password database system (it's been known to happen), you don't have to worry about them gaining access to other websites in your name. Secondly, some less reputable gambling sites can deliver toolbars or even malware to your PC, either surreptitiously or to unsuspecting young users (read: Your kids who are so excited about gambling that they don't pay attention to security). That's why it's important to run comprehensive security software and keep it up to date. One of the Internet's oldest and most popular destinations, Addicting Games is home to literally thousands of browser-based games. They are divided into categories like Action, Car, Funny, Sports and Strategy, so rest assured that there is something for everyone. That said, this collection was definitely designed with the kids in mind, so if you're looking for more sophisticated fare, check out MSN Games (below). Unless, of course, you get a kick out of titles like Urine Trouble.Look up on the web! It's DC Universe Online, a massively multiplayer online game (or, as kids say, MMOs) built around comic book characters. After you create your own superhero (admit it, you've always wanted it), you engage in missions and battles to improve your stats and make your character more powerful. In its early days, DCUO access would cost you $14.99 per month, but now you can play in this virtual world for free. Sure, the site still offers premium options and monthly subscriptions, but freebie players get more or less the complete gaming experience: unlimited access to the world, two-character slots and 28 stock items, 12 bank slots, and so on. Holy lost weekends, Batman! Kido'z Games offers age appropriate games and fun. If you have younger children and you are concerned about the quality and suitability of the games they can find online, take a look at Kido'z Games.The website offers a safe, kid-friendly environment that lives entirely in your browser (meaning there is nothing to install). It offers more than 100 games for kids in the 5-10 range, ranging from block-sliding puzzles to arcade racing to simple Tic-Tac-Toe.All games are free to play, but kids will have to sit through a very short ad each one. There is something very relaxing with soaring soaring heaven—without paying exorbitant fares or worrying about crashing! Microsoft Flight places you in the cockpit of various aircraft and lets you fly them over the lush landscapes of Hawaii. It doesn't matter if you're a first-time pilot; Flights cater to all levels of knowledge. The game requires a download and a Games for Windows Live account, but both are free. To extend the experience, Microsoft offers additional planes and landscapes for purchases. Let the Kids Have Addicting Games; for more adult diversions, head to MSN Games. The site is home to some of the best puzzles, cards, words, and trivia web games have to offer—everything from Backgammon to Bejeveled to Texas Hold m.Even better, many of the games can be played with other living people, so it's not just you against the computer—it's you against the world. And virtually all games are free to play. This story, Five Cool Places to Play Games Online was originally published by BrandPost. ESRB In a previous article, I wrote about how the average age of a player has risen above 30, and as a result, games are increasingly created for a diverse audience. Tools like ESRB ratings and parental control are effective ways to make sure that the games your kids play are the ones that you deem appropriate. But parents need to be involved in how their children play these games, especially when it comes to playing them online. The impact of the Internet on video games has been great, and the more we know about the potential risks and how to deal with them, the better. Generally online-enabled video games allow players to interact and compete with each other in real time, making for a more exciting, social and immersive experience. Several of these games offer live communication, which may include voice or text chat features. This means that there is always a threat of exposure to offensive language, harassment and other verbal abuse. Parents should address questions about their children's online interactions in the same way that they would address problems with friends and strangers offline. Safety tips for playing games online With the growing popularity of online-enabled games, you will encounter the ESRB's Online Rating Notice, which states: The gaming experience may change during online games, or online interactions are not rated by the ESRB. This warning means that when the game is played online, there may be exposure to content that was not considered when the rating was assigned. This Message is located on the front and/or back of packages of games that are online enabled, just below the ESRB rating. There are several precautions you can take to make sure your child's online gaming experience is safe. The most effective way for this is by seeking out games and online services that offer parents the opportunity to: Block. You can block out strangers and limit the people your kids can play with to only a select group of approved friends, much like a Gamer Mute. The mute feature allows you to turn off the ability to chat with other players during a game, whether it's typed text or voice chat over a headset. Monitor. Some online services like Xbox Live allow parents to view a list of players their children have interacted with during an online session, which can help determine who they can and can't play with. In addition to blocking a player who behaves inappropriately, you can also notify a game publisher or online service of the offender. Check the terms of service or game publisher for instructions on how to file a complaint against another player, and be sure to include as much information as possible about the player in question. Beware of Mods While it requires some technical finesse to chat while playing games, some players have the ability to change or introduce elementsinto a game that can change its content from what was purchased in the store, sometimes in ways that are not consistent with ESRB ratings. For example, these players, also called modders, can change character skins (i.e. change the appearance of characters, sometimes to make them appear naked), maps (which change the setting where people play), weapons or other elements. Modders usually offers its altered or newly created content to other players in the form of a free downloadable program called a mod. Many new generations of consoles and PDAs allow players to store data through a high-capacity hard drive or memory card. And, in open environment role-playing games (RPGs), players don't necessarily need to download mods to see content that other players may have created and introduced into the game. Additional online security measures you can take Here are some additional common sense tips for managing your child's online activities: Stay informed. Educating yourself and your kids about the online spaces and communities they explore, be it a video game or social networking site. Technology and how it's used is evolving rapidly, so it's important to stay up to date. With all available resources, both online and off, there is no shortage of information to help you navigate the water and keep your family safe. Be involved. Being involved, vigilant and proactive is critical to online safety. It is recommended that the game console or computer is located in a common area of the home instead of in the child's bedroom, allowing you to keep an eye and ear on the action. And establish an ongoing dialogue with your kids about what they do and with whom they play online. Set limits. Set and discuss limits on what your kids can do on the Internet and how long they can play games online or off. Establish rules you are comfortable with, and you may even want to consider signing a Family Internet Safety Pledge with your child. Don't reveal. Make sure your know not to disclose personal or financially sensitive information about themselves or other family members when filling out profiles, purchasing articles or interacting with others online. Maintaining safe Internet habits for your family requires little technical know-how. It's all about common sense. Don't feel overwhelmed by the vast Internet, speed of change or lack of technical skills. Since experience is often the best teacher, I encourage you to try playing games online and side by side with your child to get a firsthand understanding of the ones he or she likes. At a minimum, you'll learn about the games themselves and what draws your child to them. And who knows—you might even find yourself on your child's gamer buddy list!
